Carrying out a good site study and preparing a usable business case

Some say, that the beginning is half of every task. At Mark Information, we completely agree with that statement. Therefore, we start all our implementation projects with a site study.

The purpose is to get to know our customers and understand their business and internal processes so we are prepared to implement a solution that supports the company's needs – without any inconveniences and reverse actions.

In connection with our partnership with the Danish contracting company Aarsleff we have just completed a fairly comprehensive site study. Through a high level of user involvement, it was clarified how ProMark can optimally support the time registration process. In addition, it has highlighted where ProMark will add value and thus, which areas Aarsleff should measure to ensure that the identified benefits are realized.

TCR's extended arm

Gitte Eskesen from Mark Information acts as a superuser in ProMark for TCR.

This means that a series of routine and superuser tasks are handled without TCR having to worry about having the necessary expertise or resources for the tasks – regardless of holiday and absence.
